

Dr. Oliver Carreli - Compassionate Physician of Two Decades

A graduate of Rush Medical College, Dr. Oliver Carreli works as a Family Physician at a self-named practice in Chicago, Illinois. In this capacity, he diagnoses, treats, and manages illnesses and chronic disorders for patients of varying ages. Known for his extensive medical knowledge and caring bedside manner, Dr. Oliver Carreli provides his patients with a welcoming and safe environment for receiving the attention they need.

Dr. Carreli opened his private practice in 2006 following three years as the Medical Director at Northwestern Memorial Hospital. During this time, he oversaw the hospital's daily operations, including patient experiences and quality of treatment. He previously worked at Mitchell Hospital, Kindred Chicago Central Hospital, and Mount Sinai Hospital in a range of positions, including Director of Family Medicine and Staff Physician.

Before starting work as a physician, Dr. Carreli completed both a fellowship and residency in family medicine, along with an internship in internal medicine, at the University of Illinois Hospital. Throughout his time in the professional world, he has earned several awards and honors in recognition of his unique medical talent. Dr. Carreli has also been featured in several medical publications as co-author of dozens of studies, and is a regular contributor for a local news station's medical segment.
